

Using action to achieve results at the Department of Gender & Sexualities

The Department of Gender & Sexualities considers community engagement and activism as one of its core pillars, for the mutual benefit of the department and the community at large. Academia can work with community partners to create change, build the capacity of individuals, groups and organisations, and simultaneously strengthen the academic role through teaching and research.

The department's areas of community engagement reflect its members' areas of interest and specialisations, and include media, human rights, social inclusion, gender-based violence, and LGBTIQ+, all considered through an intersectional lens. Collaboration is in place with intergovernmental, state and civil society organisations in these areas, to contribute to research, policy and practice.
